The National Farmworker Jobs Program (NFJP) provides career services, training, and supportive assistance to migrant and seasonal farmworkers and their families. It helps participants gain stable employment through job search assistance, on-the-job training (OJT), skills development, and education support. Additionally, NFJP offers supportive services such as housing assistance, transportation, childcare, and financial aid to remove barriers to employment and improve economic stability.

To qualify for NFJP programs and services, individuals must be migrant or seasonal farmworkers who have earned wages in farmwork within the last 24 months and meet low-income eligibility criteria. Dependents of eligible farmworkers may also qualify. Additional factors, such as employment barriers, may be considered.
